Patients Swarm New Kids on the Block, the Backstreet Boys and Jordin Sparks at The Voice

On June 22, patients, parents and staff alike swarmed The Voice at Children's at Egleston in anticipation of the biggest boy band of all time: NKOTBSB. The nine-person group, comprised of the New Kids on the Block and the Backstreet Boys, could now be considered a "man band" since none of the members are under the age of thirty, but this didn't bother any of the fans in the slightest. They screamed and applauded their approval when the band arrived at The Voice.

Patients were delighted to snap pictures with the members as they settled into the studio for their interview, and many were excited to later see Jordin Sparks, former American Idol and opening act for NKOTBSB.

"I can't wait to see her!" exclaimed one young girl. "She is really pretty, and she inspires me!" When asked if she was looking forward to the Backstreet Boys or New Kids on the Block, the patient's mother smiled and said, "That's who I'm excited to see!"

Employees and volunteers were also lined up to catch a glimpse of the stars. "I just love Nick Carter," said Marisa de la Garza, a staff nurse, while other employees nodded in approval.

Wendy Threatt, Voice Program Coordinator, conducted the studio interview with NKOTBSB as patients and camera crews shifted around trying to get the best view. The band talked about who is the biggest prankster of the group, their aging fan base and their favorite places to eat when on tour in the South (Waffle House!). After the interview, the band signed posters for all the patients and families, and then had an interview with E! TV, speaking highly of Children's and our patients.

"We are so grateful that we got to spend time with the kids here at The Voice," says New Kid Donnie Wahlberg. "We really gained some perspective on how blessed we are. It was a wonderful opportunity."

Brian Littrell, Backstreet Boy and Atlanta-area resident, was particularly appreciative; his son was treated at Children's when he was diagnosed with an artery disease in 2008. "Everyone here was so great to us then," he said. "And today it was a blessing to be here. It's a blessing that we have our health and it's a blessing to see the smiles of the kids."

As NKOTBSB smiled for pictures and signed autographs, Jordin Sparks was upstairs at Children's at Egleston greeting patients in their rooms. When her fellow tour members left, she came down to The Voice, chatting amiably with Wendy about her plans for the future ("I'd love to be in a movie as an action star!"), what it was like to be the youngest American Idol and her charity work. Jordan has traveled to Africa several times, most recently to Rwanda with the Starkey Hearing Foundation, which donates hearing aids to those in need.

"What would all of this be if I couldn't give back to those in need?" said the poised 21-year-old. "In my family, giving back is something we've always done."

And giving back with her big smile is exactly what she did. Jordin greeted each child who approached her for a picture or autograph as if they were the only child in the world, much like the members of the New Kids on the Block and the Backstreet Boys.
