Children's Healthcare of Atlanta

Children's Healthcare of Atlanta is keeping the children of Georgia healthy by first taking care of its employees. In 2012, the No. 5 company in the large company category in Atlanta Business Chronicle's 2013 Healthiest Employers Awards launched several new programs aimed at supporting its employees' health needs.

"We offer a comprehensive program that has something for everyone, no matter what their health status is and what their goals are for health improvement," said Wellness and WorkLife Manager Holly Firestine.

One new program, The Children's Family Wellness Program, connects employees' families with a wellness coach for eight weeks. Mission: Slimpossible is another new wellness initiative. The weight-loss support program involved 10 teams of five participants each that spend 12 weeks working with a trainer and a nutritionist. The teams lost a combined 866 pounds, reduced their body mass index by 109 points, lost 354 inches and reduced their cholesterol by an average 8.5 points per participant.

At Children's, wellness goes beyond campaigns and competitions to being part of the culture. More than 90 percent of employees who take medical benefits complete biometric screening. Employees also participate in athletic events together.

"One of the most important and effective tools for creating and reinforcing a culture of wellness for us here at Children's has simply been sharing our employees' trials and tribulations on their pursuit of better health and wellness," Firestine said. "While the wellness team offers a foundation of tools, programs and a supportive environment, it's our employee stories that keep the momentum going."
